Manager Plumton Narrowly Escapes Death at Hands of Bewildered Farmer

George Chesterman, Hope Valley Farmer, Feared He had Signed Away His Farm to Bank of Montreal. Attacked Local Manager After Regular Hours and Stabbed Him Several Times

INQUEST HELD MONDAY AT 10 O'CLOCK — JURY RETURN VERDICT OF SELF-DESTRUCTION WHILE INSANE

Letter Written to "Wainwright Star" Found on Body

FUNERAL HELD TUESDAY

At 9:30 Friday night, October 18th, George Chesterman, aged 62, farmer in the Hope Valley district, stabbed Mr. D. L. Plumton, manager of the Bank of Montreal, Wainwright, and then killed himself with a .22 caliber pistol. Details are as follows:

Mr. R. A. Snyder, owner of Snyder's Drug Store, received a phone call from the Bank of Montreal, requesting him to come over and fix the radio. When Mr. Snyder arrived at the back door of the bank to go upstairs to the living quarters of Mr. Plumton, Mr. Chesterman was standing there and asked Mr. Snyder to tell Mr. Plumton to come down as he wished to deposit two hundred dollars. Mr. Snyder delivered the message to Mr. Plumton, who picks up his two-year-old child and went downstairs, opened the door to the bank and went in, followed by Mr. Chesterman. He placed the child on the desk and turned to Mr. Chesterman, who up to this time had remained silent. Without warning, Mr. Chesterman lunged at him with a large hunting knife, stabbing him twice, one thrust glanced off his ribs, the other on his hip bone. Mr. Plumton grabbed him and yelled for help, his cries being heard by Mr. Snyder who rushed downstairs, but found the door locked. Being uncertain as to whether Mr. Snyder could break open the door or not, Mr. Plumton succeeded in dragging Mr. Chesterman to the door, which he unlocked. Mr. Plumton held Mr. Chesterman on the floor while Mr. Snyder succeeded in prying the knife from his hand. The police and Dr. Middlemass were then phoned and upon the arrival of Dr. Middlemass, Mr. Chesterman was let stand up. Mr. Snyder noticed Mr. Chesterman fumbling with something in his pocket and it looked as if he was trying to get something to his mouth. Suddenly he realised it was a gun and he shouted a warning to the doctor, who started toward Chesterman with the intention of knocking the gun from his hand, but he was just a second too late. Putting the gun to his mouth, Mr. Chesterman pulled the trigger, killing himself. The police who had arrived on the scene, removed the body to the undertaker.

By order of the Attorney General's Department an inquest was held before a jury of six at 10:30 Monday morning. They returned a verdict of due to financial worries Mr. Chesterman was led to his rash act.

It is thought Mr. Chesterman was under the impression he had signed his farm away, whereas all he had signed was a first mortgage crop lease, which entitled the Bank to one-third of his crop.

When the body was searched they found $1.65, a small pen knife and a letter addressed to The Wainwright Star, which reads as follows:

"To the Editor of
"The Wainwright Star."
"To Whom It May Concern—
"This Bank Manager gets his deserts. You see it was like this. He wrote me to come in and sign a new note, which I did, but I forgot to take my reading glasses. I asked him to read out the amount of the note first, and I signed. Then he asked me if I would sign another note for the same amount, one demand and one straight note. He promised me he would personally return the note they didn't use. He has not returned it yet. Then he asked me if I would give one-third crop off my mortgaged land. I said yes, if I could. He said would I sign for that, I said yes, then he went to the door of his office and asked Redgewell for three of them third crop agreements. Redgewell brought them and handed them to Plumton. They were already folded inside out, the chief part about signing over to the Bank. Plumton spread them like a hand of cards and put them on the desk in front of me, pointing to the blank saying, "Sign here," and turned to go out of the room after Redgewell. I said, "What is in these papers," and he replied, "Oh, the usual old third crop agreement," and went out. I guess he didn't want to read it to me or answer questions. It was me signing my farm over to the bank, and them leaving it back to me for 1934 on a one-third crop. I was alone and had nothing else to do, so like a fool, I signed the three papers. Plumton came back and picked up the papers and took them out to Redgewell and he signed as witness. Now, I ought to put Redgewell for his part in this trickery but will let him live to perhaps tell the truth that no one saw me sign, as I was by myself in the room. But, of course, Redgewell is expecting a job as manager. Still, never mind, I did sign, but I was under the impression it was a third crop agreement only, not signing my farm over to the bank."

(Signed) Geo. Chesterman.

A peculiar thing, however, was when officials were searching the body they found boards about eight or nine inches long tied with binder twine around the deceased legs. What this was done for is not quite clear. It may have been his expected a fight and this was for protection, as deceased had told witnesses he was bothered with his legs at different times.

Mr. Plumton, we are glad to report, is able to be up and around.

The deceased leaves his widow and one son Thomas.

W.M.S. Hold Meeting

On Thursday evening October 12th the W.M.S. of the United Church held their usual Autumn Thank Offering meeting, which was well attended. The president, Mrs. Courcier, had charge of the meeting.

The Young Women's Circle took the devotional part, Beale Bowerman reading Scripture, prayer by Vera Hausfeldt, and a very interesting talk by Miss Helen Torg. The Junior choir with Miss L. Bloom at the piano, gave several numbers.

Margaret Steel told very interesting story of "Mrs. Osborne's Awakening."

A Mission Band member, Helen Salisbury, told in a very charming manner the story of "The Missionary Potato." Marian Lane gave piano solo and Pat Washburn led in prayer.

Mrs. Armstrong read a letter describing the ceremony of Tea serving in China. Rev. Armstrong closed the meeting with prayer.

Refreshments were served and a pleasant social hour spent.

Book Tells of Awful Slavery Existing Today

BERLIN.—Appalling details of slavery still being practiced in Abyssinia are told in a book by the German archeologist, Max Gruhl, entitled Die Zitadelle Afrika and just off the press. He himself, the author says, has seen a caravan of slaves in that country, composed of both men and women, mostly half naked, and many of them with their children, locked together in iron, like chain-gangs, being whipped in line by ruthless drivers. They were treated worse than animals, having been violently kidnapped by the slave merchants and carried away from their homes by force. The caravan, the author says, went by for hours and the poor prisoners were hardly fed at all. At night they would rest in the open, unprotected from rain or heat.

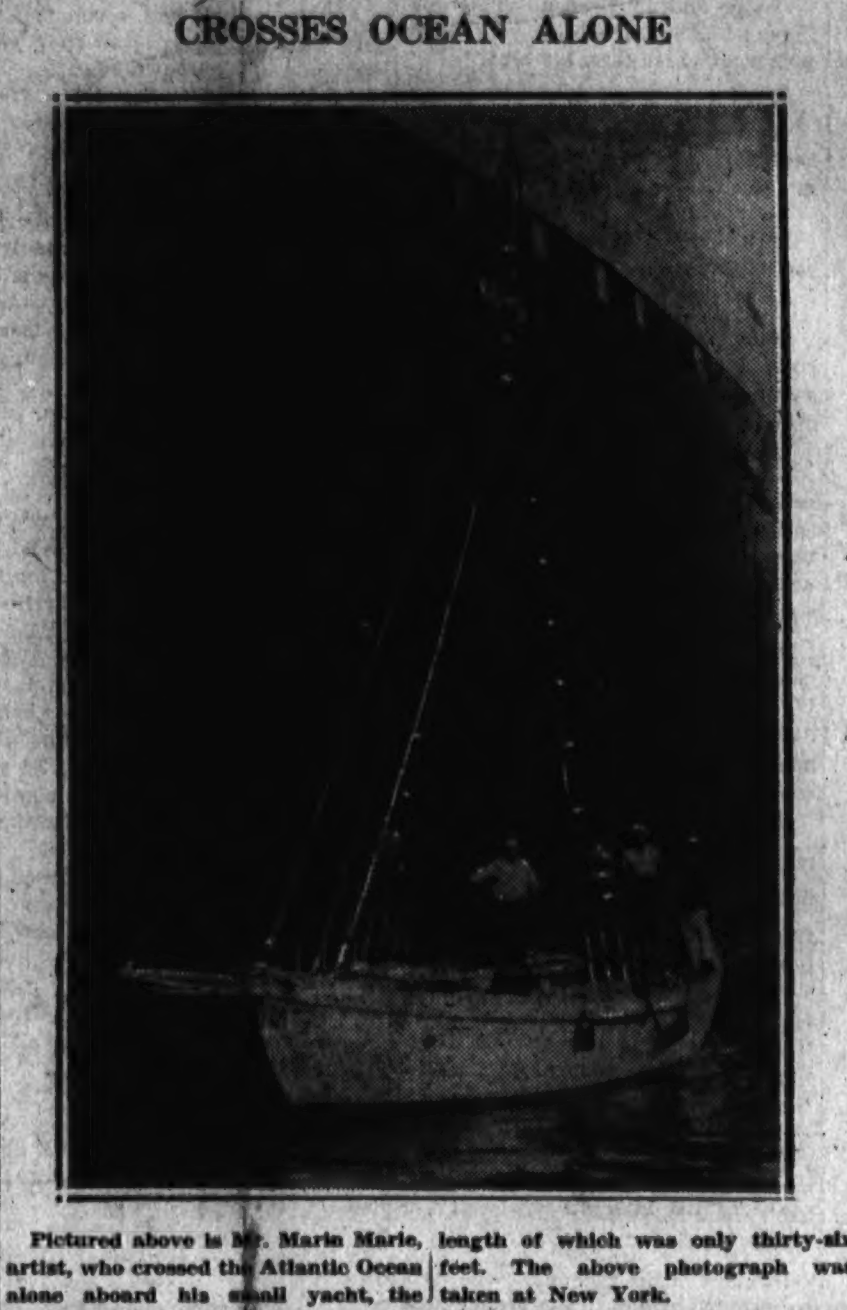

THINKS PORT'S FUTURE ASSURED

CHURCHILL, Man.—With the restoration of normal crops the future of Churchill is assured, grain men of this northern Manitoba port believed. Despite a temporary setback received when lower lake freight rates were put into effect, sailings equal to last season's record number, carried a greater quantity of grain to overseas ports.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH

In our notes of last week's issue of the Wainwright Star, there was quite an error in the report of Rev. Wilson's address, due to a couple of lines being left out. It should have read something like this: Rev. Wilson of Edgerton, who was the special preacher for the evening service took for his text, "And they put on board all things needful for the journey." Mr. Wilson said he was not so concerned with the visible gifts which probably were, food, clothing, presents etc., but he was vitally interested in the Invisible Gifts which were, Hope, Courage, Human Sympathy and Gratitude; these, the preacher said, were gifts which we all could give to one another.

On Sunday last, this being Children's Day throughout the Anglican territory in Canada, special services were held in St. Thomas, Wainwright.

Three-Year Silence Broken

A three-year silence of the Arctic was broken when Royal Canadian Mounted Police, headquarters established wireless contact with Canada's far northern police patrol from Bache Peninsula, 70 miles from the North Pole. "All in well," reported Corporal H. M. Stallworthy and Constable H. W. Hamilton, and A. Munro in their first message to the outside world in three years of lonely Arctic patrol. Bache Peninsula, one of the most inaccessible police posts in the north, has been evacuated, the post being moved to Craig Harbor because of difficulty of transporting supplies.

The Wainwright Hockey Club held a very successful dance in the Elite Theatre Monday night, many being present from Edgerton and other points.

Music was supplied by a peppy orchestra which all present enjoyed. A tasty lunch was served at midnight after which the lucky number was drawn for the buffalo robe. Ten names were drawn from a box and then the lucky one was chosen from the ten. Miss Janet Forster picked the following names: Mr. D. Plumton, J. W. Stuart, O. R. Hannah, Connie Burden, W. Prosser, W. S. Clark, Dr. Maynes, P. Brassard, Alex Gaulin and H. Wilson.

Miss Connie Burden was awarded the lovely robe.

Well, well, well and well. I'd Wainwright do well at Vermilion? I'll say so. Too bad Edith Steel wasn't there, as she surely would have brought back the individual cup for the girls. We sure are proud of our group, as they did exceedingly well for the number of entrants. Our group for Wainwright took third place at the meet.

Margaret Steel took 1st place in Girls' Standing Broad Jump—7 feet 7 1/2 inches.
Russel Ganderton was 2nd in the Men's Standing Broad Jump—9 feet 1 inch.

Cliff took 1st place in the running broad jump for the Juniors—18 feet, 10 inches (1 inch less than the Senior). He also came third in the Junior 220 yards.

Grace Wittmann took first in the basketball throw.

Vivian Wittmann came second in the 50 yard dash.

In the shot put, Wallace Prosser was second—30 feet, 2 inches, and Doug, Wallace third with 29 feet, 10 inches.

Russel Ganderton was second in the Senior hop, step and jump.
Joe Collet took first place in the half-mile run. He took it easy all the way round until about 220 yds. before the finish, when he past one and then another and came in a easy first.

The Editor and staff wish to congratulate all those who took part at the meet.

Mrs. Marshall then gave a very interesting and instructive talk about the various activities of the Order.

DESPERATE DISEASES

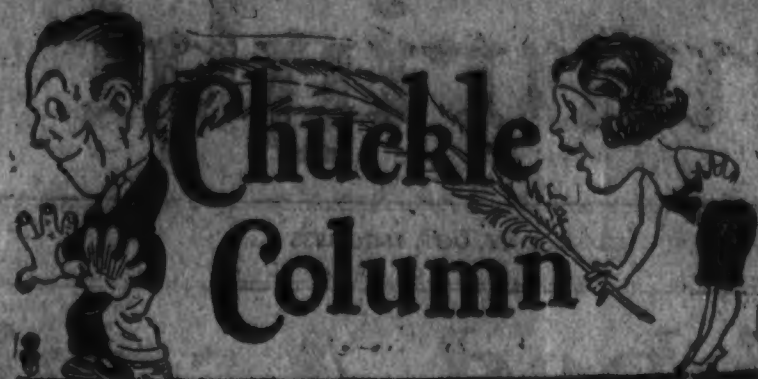

No matter how much our people have done for the material progress of the world, no matter how much they have achieved through the development of immense resources, or how much in creating unlimited physical wealth, the great outstanding evidence of the last fifty years of their combined accomplishment has been the upbuilding of a plutocratic state called Capitalism.

The trouble with such a state is the difficulty in reforming it. And if the New Deal brings the people to that frame of mind when the essentials of such a reform can be grasped it will have achieved the maximum, at least, in its educational program. In the May number of The American Review, formerly The Bookman, it is editorially claimed that "The people are powerless to recover the State from a plutocracy." This, according to The Review, can only be done by a monarch. If that is so, then there should be no difficulty, if necessary, in giving someone monarchical powers. Belloc defines the principal function of a monarch, when symbolizing the ultimate sovereignty of the people, as that of "protecting the weak against the strong, and therefore preventing the accumulation of wealth in few hands, the corruption of the Courts of Justice and of the sources of public opinion."

Even so, a monarch may be but a monarch in name only. Quite a simple formula, but not so simple when applied to the power of wealth "which spreads its gains among a large number, and which achieves popular support by inducing the bulk of citizens to believe that they may rise to be a part of it." (American Review)

From the editorial quoted we submit the following description of that power within the State which must oppose reform.

"The moral background of plutocracy is greed. Plutocracy is the enthronement of the desire for gain. In summarizing the last hundred and fifty years of Western history, truth would far outweigh exaggeration if one were to say that the moral history of the period has been the progressive emancipation of greed; the intellectual history has been chiefly the finding of ever more powerful agencies for greed to utilize (scientific industrialism); the political history has been in the national field, the usurpation of government by the most successfully greedy, and in the international field, the strife resulting Impatient man outside telephone booth: Can I help you find the number that you want?

Sweet Young Thing: Oh, no, thank you. I don't want a number. I'm looking for a pretty, sweet name to give my new dog.

At a party in England, the headmaster of a local school felt that he had partaken rather freely of champagne; he determined to be careful and avoid showing any of the usual signs of tipsiness.

When they rose from the table some one suggested that the hostess exhibit "the latest addition to her family." She agreed and presently the nurse appeared with a dainty pink basket containing twins.

The headmaster was nearest and mindful of his determination, he from greed using the forces of the State to feed itself (imperialism). The moral, intellectual, political, legal and technical structure built up by the dominance of greed is called Capitalism. Its essence is the destruction of private property and liberty by the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few, who act blindly in their own interests at the expense of the interests of society as a whole.

In our opinion this picture is not a particle overdrawn. The people must realize, and forcefully realize, where the seat of trouble is, not only in Canada but throughout the world before a solution can be found. "Desperate diseases require desperate remedies."

Here and There

Four moose and two bear were taken by a party of six Paterson, N.J., hunters in the Kipawa district recently. The moose ranged from fifty to fifty-eight inch heads. This early success points to a good season in the district north of Montreal.

October 10-11 are the dates set for the International Cover Dog trials to be held at Petersburg, New Brunswick. Many letters have been received from dog fanciers, both in the United States and Canada, inquiring as to the trials and a large entry list is expected.

First shipment of asparagus from Port Nelson, Ontario, to England, aboard the Duchess of Richmond recently, has been acknowledged by letters from the Old Country, stating that the "grass" arrived in excellent condition and was of exceptional quality and flavor.

Among the recent visitors to Grand Pré Memorial Park, in the Evangeline country of Nova Scotia was Mrs. A. J. Lafrance of Laconia, N.H., whose husband is a lineal descendant of Francois Lafrance, an Acadian officer banished at the time of the expulsion of the Acadians.

A generous supply of British capital awaits investment in Canada. Sir Herbert Samuel, leader of the Liberal parliamentary party in the British House of Commons, told a large luncheon meeting of the Canadian Club at the Royal York Hotel, Toronto, recently.

The world's largest map of Canada, 20 feet high and 100 feet long, painted by Montreal artists on linen, hangs in the Hall of Nations, Chicago World Fair, as a joint display of the Dominion Government, the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National Railways. Guarded by three red-coated members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, it is one of the most popular exhibits of the great fair.

Sir William Shenton, Carlton Club, Pall Mall, London, who was a delegate to the meeting of the Institute of Pacific Relations held at the Banff Springs Hotel, in August, recently concluded a salmon fishing trip to the upper waters of the St. John River near Perth. Having fished in Ireland and Norway, Sir William stated that the St. John River salmon could not be beaten for fighting qualities and average size.

ASPIRIN DOES NOT HARM THE HEART

A Knight of France

A little more than four centuries ago—or, to be exact, in February, 1312—the inhabitants of Brescia, one of the most strongly fortified towns of Lombardy, opened their gates to the Venetian army, although only a short time before they had sworn fealty to the King of France. This action infuriated the French troops who then occupied Italy. They vowed vengeance against the perfidious town, marched at once against it, and smothered so rapidly that on the morning of February 17 they formed in three columns before its gates and began the assault.

The Venetians and the Brescians seized their arms and prepared for a stubborn resistance. They were animated to do their utmost by the reflection that, if they were defeated they could expect scant mercy from their conquerors. With indescribable fury, the two armies hurled themselves against each other at the gates first of all, and then, when the assailants forced their way within, in the streets and byways. While the battle was raging, the women of the town barricaded the doors of their houses and sought out the most secret recesses in which to hide their children and themselves.

About the centre of the town, in a square toward which all the principal streets converged, there was a handsome residence belonging to a prosperous merchant, Lorenzo Salvi. He was absent on a journey this February morning and had left at home his wife Leonora, and his two young daughters, and their old servant woman. At the first roar of the battle, all four had taken refuge in the attic, having previously barricaded the street door with trunks and chests piled one on top of the other. Crouching in a dark corner of the attic, they listened with ever-increasing anxiety and fear to the sounds of conflict. The reports of the arquebuses and bombards sounded like a thunderstorm, causing the windows to rattle and the very walls of the house to tremble. This lasted for a long time; then a calm ensued; and all at once Leonora heard in the deserted street before her house door, voices calling out in French:

"Open to a dying man!"

She glided over to a dormer window, opened it quietly, and leaning out, saw two soldiers carry a wounded man upon a litter. The outstretched figure was that of a tall officer, very thin, blackened with powder, simply dressed, and carrying in his right hand a plain sword. He had received a desperate stroke in the hip from a pike, the head of which was still deeply embedded in the flesh.

The litter-bearers saw Leonora, and one of them cried out imperiously:

"Hurry up! He will die if there is not prompt succour; for he is losing much blood!"

Salvi's wife made no reply; but she took rapid counsel with herself. What should she do? The presence of these Frenchmen in the heart of Brescia showed that the town's defenders had not been victors. It would be folly to open her house just when the enemy would be ready for sack and pillage and murder. But, then, on the other hand, to allow a Christian to die for want of care and assistance—no, that would not do, either.

Her compassion overruling her prudence, she went downstairs, removed the barricade, and, opening the door said to the two soldiers in good French:

"Come in now."

They entered, and she was about to close the door again when the wounded man murmured:

"What's the use?"

"Very well," she said. "Let it remain open, and may God protect us!"

Leonora led the way to a large chamber with richly tapestried walls, and told the soldiers to lay their burden on a great bed, at the corners of which were four chased columns. She then called her little girls and the old servant. They came down from the attic, pale and frightened; but quickly obeyed the orders they received.

"Come, children, cut up this linen into strips; and you, Nita, make haste and heat a pot of water."

The little ones finished their task and once more betook themselves to the attic. Leonora zealously attended to the wounded man, washed the wound with care, and did her best to staunch the blood. She soon saw, however, that she could not succeed, and that the Frenchman would die unless the pike head was withdrawn.

"We need a doctor," she said. Although her tone was scarce above a whisper, the man on the bed heard her, and turned his eyes toward her. "Yes!" he exclaimed. "a doctor! But in this disorderly city, is it possible to find one?"

"My relative, Master Agrippa," she replied, "knows all the secrets of surgery. Unfortunately, he can not serve us now. He has taken refuge in the church of the Rotunda, a few hundred yards from here; and, even if he were offered more gold than he has ever seen, he would not risk of appearing on the streets today."

"What does your relative look like?" asked the Frenchman.

"He is a bald-headed old man, a little round-shouldered; he wears a black velvet robe with a clasp whose clasps are in the form of intertwined serpents."

"Good!" said the wounded man. "He then made a sign to the two soldiers; and, as they hurriedly ran out, he raised himself a little on the pillow, mused for a moment, and said in a marvellously tranquil tone:

"I beg you, Madame, not to imagine that I am afraid of death. If I desire to recover from the blow I received this morning, it is not because I am unreasonably attached to life, but because France and the King still need my services. That is why I am trying to recover. If it concerned only myself, I should be less careful of my life."

Leonora did not reply. His words astonished her, and she knew not what to think. It was a tragic hour, in any case. There was spreading over Brescia a noise, not of battle but of panic—a curious galloping; the Italian cavaliers as they sped by shouted:

"Run for your lives!"

A few minutes passed; and then, propelled by four vigorous arms, the surgeon appeared on the scene. And what a figure he made! Rage and terror combined were depicted on his countenance; he gritted his teeth and clenched his fists; and the rents in his robe proved that his coming was not at all voluntary.

He approached the bed, examined the cruel wound, and said with brutal frankness:

"Sir soldier, I'm going to pull out this bit of iron. But I warn you, you are going to suffer horribly, and in probability you'll faint."

The Frenchman smiled a little. "Pull away, sir! It would be strange if I were to faint. It is not the first bit of iron that has been drawn from my flesh. I've had some practice in supporting pain. Pull away, sir!"

And the surgeon pulled. The patient never moved an eyelid, uttered no cry or moan, or, moreover, underwent the subsequent torture of the scalpel and the scissors without a murmur. To do Master Agrippa justice, however, it must be said that the operation was skilfully performed. Once he had finished, the old man's fright and fury returned. He seized Leonora by the sleeve, drew her into a corner of the room, and then in a growling, if low, tone of voice began:

"It's your fault that I'm here in a house wide open, and that they dragged me from the church where our enemies would not, I think, have dared to commit murder. Up to today, Leonora, I've taken you to be a woman of sense; but now I see that you're shallow-brained, after all. Explain to me if you can for what purpose you have received this wounded man, and what advantage you expect to get for doing so."

"Why, the man was going to die!"

"Well! A good many others are going to die today. Ah, if you had, my girl, saved some powerful French lord, I wouldn't have blamed you! A lord might perhaps have rewarded you with pillage and massacre. But you pick up at your threshold a miserable soldier of fortune, a rascal black as a crow, thin as a red herring, a fellow whose wardrobe isn't worth three guineas. Do you count on his protecting you, now that those French cutthroats are coming? He's more likely to call them in here."

"Well, we are in the hands of God."

"You have acted like a child. I have acted as my heart bade me."

"Hark, Leonora! Listen!"

What cries they heard! Shouts of triumph, imprecations, imprecations—all these were blended. Doors were broken open, shops were demolished, windows were smashed and furniture thrown through them, barrels and hogheads were rolled out. The bells, rung by the victors to announce their triumph afar, added to the clamour.

And it was no longer on the outskirts of the town that this drama was being enacted, but in the very square, where stood the Salvi residence.

"In a few minutes," said Master Agrippa, fatteringly, "they will be upon us."

Leonora wrung her hands, and said: "Blessed Mother Mary, protect us!"

The invasion of the bedroom was brusque. In the twinkling of an eye the chamber was filled with fierce-eyed soldiers, and they had begun their pillaging even from their entrance. One had a statuette, another a reliquary of gold, a third a costly vase, a fourth a silver bracket. They were just on the point of assaulting the woman when the wounded man, who had been doing with his head turned to the wall, was aroused by the noise. Raising himself on his elbow, he looked around him and called out angrily:

"What's all this?"

At the sound of that voice and a look at the frowning visages of the speaker, the intruders were checked as if by a stroke of lightning. They shivered and lowered their eyes.

"But down that booty!" came the voice from the bed.

It was placed at once on the floor. "Now clear out, and don't return!"

Quietly and sheepishly, the pillagers scarcely daring to breathe, left the chamber and the house.

Leonora thought she was dreaming. Impressed and overjoyed, she followed the soldiers to the street door, and detaining the last one, asked, as she handed him a gold piece:

"How do you call that wounded man on the bed?"

"Don't you know him?"

"Why not?"

"But everybody knows him!"

"Not I, in any case. Is he perhaps the King of France?"

"He is the knight without fear and without reproach—the Chevalier Bayard."
